Nick Was Here

The Hon. Nicholas Longworth who far inferior then to Marie Niclasowna as is a common soldier to an emperor.

"Is it possible?" said the czar to himself as he sent for the colonel with the design of sending him to Munich. But at the moment when he was about to crush him with a word he stopped at the sight of his daughter fainting in her calash. "There is no longer a doubt," thought the czar; "he is indeed he."

And, turning his back upon the stupefied stranger, he returned with Marie to the imperial palace.

For six weeks all that prudence, tempered with love and severity, could inspire was essayed to destroy the image of the colonel in the heart of the princess. At the end of the first week she was resigned; at the end of the second she wept; at the end of the third she wept in public; at the end of the fourth she wished to sacrifice herself to her father; at the end of the fifth she was dying. Meanwhile the colonel, seeing himself in disgrace at the court of his host without daring to confess to himself the cause, did not wait for his dismissal to return to his regiment. He was on the point of setting out for Munich when an aid-de-camp of the czar came for him.

"I should have set out yesterday," he said to himself. "I might have avoided what awaits me. At the first flash save yourself from the thunder-bolt."

He was ushered into the cabinet where kings only are allowed to enter. The emperor was pale, and his eye was moist, but his air was firm and resolute.

"Colonel Duke," said he, enveloping and penetrating him with a glance, "you are one of the handsomest officers in Europe. It is said also—and I believe it is true—that you possess an elevated mind, a thorough education
